

The Notre Dame
International Security Center

CLIMATE WARS

with Professor of Political Science
Neta C. Crawford

Date:

Tuesday April 26, 2022

Time:

4:30PM–6:00PM

Location:

1050 Jenkins Nanovic Halls

Neta C. Crawford is a professor of Political Science and currently chairs the department of political science. Her teaching focuses on international relations theory, international ethics, and normative change. Crawford received the Distinguished Scholar award from the International Ethics section of the International Studies Association in 2018.

Her research interests include international relations theory, normative theory, foreign policy decision making, sanctions, peace movements, discourse ethics, post-conflict peacebuilding, research design, utopian science fiction, and emotion. Crawford is also interested in methods for understanding the costs and consequences of war and is co-director of the Eisenhower Study Group “Costs of War” study based at Brown University.

Free and open to the public
All attendees are requested to wear a mask

Learn more at
ndisc.nd.edu/news-events